WINTER LIVING THEOLOGY JESUIT INSTITUTION:

The Gospel: would one book not have been enough?

In the second century, Tatian proposed merging the four Gospel accounts into one harmonized text. The Church rejected this proposal. Would it not have made our lives simpler? This series of presentations will illustrate the richness of having a multiplicity of renditions of the life, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. By engaging in a reading of select texts from the three books of Mark, Matthew and Luke, we will discover how three complementary portraits of Jesus emerge that deepen our understanding of who he is in our lives.

After entering the Jesuits, he obtained Pontifical Licenses in Theology in Paris and Scripture from the Pontifical Biblical Institute in Rome. He was a lecturer in Scripture for twenty-two years at the Latin Catholic Patriarchate Seminary and Bethlehem University, as well as other academic institutions in Israel and Palestine. Fr. David served as Episcopal Vicar for Hebrew-speaking Catholics and migrants and asylum seekers in Israel from 2009 until 2017. He has written widely on Scripture, the Israel-Palestine conflict and interreligious dialogue. He has recently returned, for a time, to South Africa to be closer to his elderly mother and rediscover the land of his roots. Our prices reflect our attempts to become self-sufficient.
